

Scribe: Daniel Sanchez

Other team members: Sabrina Drammis, Sam Edson, Grant Gunnison

MVP Notes:

- Watch out for duplicate tags from classes and manually input skills
 - Solution: multiple tags endorse each other
- How would challenge submission work?
 - Do employers grade manually?
 - Probably
- Be careful not to get too diluted from original state of matching
 - What features are we looking for in final submission?
- Employers contact over email
- MVP only functionality is search
 - Final should enhance search but should also include other features
- We can still make something cool with our current idea
- Currently, not terribly different from Employers emailing to Anne Hunter, and saying “I’m looking for students with these skills”
- Might be good to have communication done on website rather than email
- No problem with adding another purpose in order to expand the scope of the project
 - We need to find the right balance of the scope of our purpose: can’t be too broad (too much work) or too specific (project may not be as useful as intended)
- Challenges is one interaction (reason to use the site), we should think about more interactions (which is why messaging within the site was suggested)
- Not much for the student to do after creating the profile
 - Might need to think about company search as a way for students to have more interaction